Re: GN Docket No. 09-191

January 10, 2010

Dear Chairman Genachowski, Commissioners Baker, Clyburn, Copps and McDowell:

As a technology leader in the Athens, Georgia area, I know first-hand the importance of investing in broadband and wireless networks. Businesses and consumers across Athens rely on these technologies to make their companies more efficient and to keep people connected.

I am concerned that the Federal Communications Commission is considering network neutrality regulations on these technologies that could stifle additional investment. And, this is not the time to stifle investment in either of these technologies. We must promote public policy that encourages investment by private companies. The wireless industry is an excellent example of how competition has promoted investment in technology.

Having access to advanced technologies is critical to this area. Wireless and broadband are not only essential to my business as a web design and consulting company; they have also become a necessary part of many people's daily lives. Businesses and consumers everywhere are in control of their wireless experience and this environment was created without government regulation.

I urge you to carefully consider any regulation on these industries. We cannot afford for companies to reduce their investments in the latest technology.

Sincerely,
